Practical learning and candid clinical debate

A clinical programme exploring emerging science, promising new indications, personalised prescribing, patient experience and the difficult decisions shaping cannabis care in the UK.

Emerging science and new indications

Emerging research into potential new uses, why treatment response varies and what this could mean for more personalised care.

Smarter product and prescribing decisions

Minor cannabinoids, terpenes, whole-product profiles and when higher THC is - or is not - justified.

Clear responsibilities across the pathway

Starting to prescribe, choosing a clinic, shared-care accountability and support from the wider clinical team.

Patient experience, safety and harm reduction

Listening without judgement while recognising psychiatric risk, dependence, withdrawal and unsafe use.

Real-world systems and difficult decisions

International lessons, treatment failure, clinical boundaries and the cases for which there are no easy answers.

Who it's for

Open to clinicians and healthcare professionals eligible for MCCS membership, including established prescribers, those new to cannabis medicine and colleagues supporting patients across the care pathway.

Your ticket includes

- In person: full conference access, lunch and refreshments, a CPD attendance certificate and access to main-stage recordings after the event.
- Online: live streaming and recordings of the main-stage programme
